If you love a good teen rom-com, then odds are you fell head over heels in love with Netflix's 2018 film The Kissing Booth, which starred Joey King as Elle, who found herself breaking the cardinal rule of friendship: she fell for her best friend's brother. The premise alone is enough to make your inner teen angst fill with glee, but given that it's been a year and a half since the movie came out, it's only natural to impatiently wonder when The Kissing Booth 2 comes out on Netflix. Though a teaser for The Kissing Booth sequel was released by the streaming service back in February 2019 (on Valentine's Day, no less) it didn't come with an official release date. And here we all a whole year later none the wiser. There is one prominent clue that the film's debut is coming soon. Back in August of 2019, King confirmed that filming for The Kissing Booth 2 had officially wrapped in South Africa. "A pile of clothes, 5 deflated birthday balloons, a covered tattoo, a wig and my last day as Elle Evans in South Africa," King posted on Twitter alongside a selfie. "Thanks for the memories." That would give the filmmakers and Netflix enough time to get everything sorted for a premiere sometime in 2020 — we're not sure Kissing Booth fans could stand to wait until 2021. Given that its predecessor came out in the May of 2018, that is a likely premiere spot for number two, but don't count out a June or July date either. A pile of clothes, 5 deflated birthday balloons, a covered tattoo, a wig and my last day as Elle Evans in South Africa. Thanks for the memories ♥ pic.twitter.com/jX2uajqB9w — Joey King (@JoeyKing) August 17, 2019 For her part, though, King is eager for fans to see the latest installment in her character Elle's journey. But — as you probably suspect — it won't be smooth sailing between Elle and Noah (Jacob Elordi) now that they've found themselves in a long-distance relationship. (Thanks a lot, Harvard!) "You'll get to see lots of ups and downs, not just between Noah and Elle, but you'll see what's going on between Lee and Elle and Lee and his girlfriend, and lots going on at Harvard," King told Refinery29.com in a March 2019 interview. That certainly sounds like trouble in paradise. But potential heartbreak and all, The Kissing Booth 2 can't get here soon enough. As the end of summer nears, so does the end of a beloved Netflix series: the Kissing Booth films. Earlier this week, the streaming platform premiered The Kissing Booth 3, the final chapter in the teen rom-com that put Joey King and Jacob Elordi on the Hollywood map. Expect more kissing and maybe even the presence of a booth or two — along with the bittersweet emotions that come with a farewell to King's recent high school graduate Elle and her oft-grumpy college dreamboat Noah (Elordi). While Kissing Booth 3 offers a glossy and generally joyful look at California, another new Netflix title this week is far more enamoured with the inherent darkness of L.A. That project is Brand New Cherry Flavor, a proudly weird TV show about curses, the undead, and the horror of creativity. This is Get Out mom Catherine Keener like you've never, ever, ever seen before. You'll also find a new baking series, a John David Washington-led thriller, the return of Netflix's absolute sexiest international series, and more. These are all the new Netflix offerings broken down by plot, genre, and whether you should watch something immediately or skip for now. Keep reading for the lowdown on all of these Netflix treats, including their trailers. (Image credit: Dreamstime) Her eyes are wide as they stare into yours. You wrap your arm around her waist and pull her in close. She touches your face and you lean in, tilt your head — to the right, of course — and your lips connect. The rushing sensation leaves you little room to wonder, "Why the hell am I doing this anyway?" Of course, the simplest answer is that humans kiss because it just feels good. But there are people for whom this explanation isn't quite sufficient. They formally study the anatomy and evolutionary history of kissing and call themselves philomatologists. So far, these kiss scientists haven't conclusively explained how human smooching originated, but they've come up with a few theories, and they've mapped out how our biology is affected by a passionate lip-lock. A big question is whether kissing is learned or instinctual. Some say it is a learned behavior, dating back to the days of our early human ancestors. Back then, mothers may have chewed food and passed it from their mouths into those of their toothless infants. Even after babies cut their teeth, mothers would continue to press their lips against their toddlers' cheeks to comfort them. Supporting the idea that kissing is learned rather than instinctual is the fact that not all humans kiss. Certain tribes around the world just don't make out, anthropologists say. While 90 percent of humans actually do kiss, 10 percent have no idea what they're missing. Others believe kissing is indeed an instinctive behavior, and cite animals' kissing-like behaviors as proof. While most animals rub noses with each other as a gesture of affection, others like to pucker up just like humans. Bonobos, for example, make up tons of excuses to swap some spit. They do it to make up after fights, to comfort each other, to develop social bonds, and sometimes for no clear reason at all — just like us. Today, the most widely accepted theory of kissing is that humans do it because it helps us sniff out a quality mate. When our faces are close together, our pheromones "talk" — exchanging biological information about whether or not two people will make strong offspring. Women, for example, subconsciously prefer the scent of men whose genes for certain immune system proteins are different from their own. This kind of match could yield offspring with stronger immune systems, and better chances for survival. Still, most people are satisfied with the explanation that humans kiss because it feels good. Our lips and tongues are packed with nerve endings, which help intensify all those dizzying sensations of being in love when we press our mouths to someone else's. Experiencing such feelings doesn't usually make us think too hard about why we kiss — instead, it drives us to find ways to do it more often. We're also on Facebook & Google+. Three years after the first Kissing Booth film that stole the hearts of teens — and let's be real, a number of grown people — all over the world, Netflix is closing out the love story of Elle (Joey King) and Noah (Jacob Elordi) with a bang. The final chapter of one of the streaming platform's most popular teen romance franchises is almost upon us, and its trailer hints that Elle's happily ever after won't come without its fair share of drama. And honestly, we wouldn't have it any other way. The Kissing Booth 3 picks up right where the 2020 sequel left off, seeing Elle stuck between a rock and a hard place as she tries to decide where she's going to college. In the end credits of the second film, we learned that our protagonist had actually been accepted into both Harvard University and the University of California, Berkeley without even one studying montage. Both options are technically great — respectively, they'll lead to her either staying in California with her best friend Lee (Joel Courtney) or heading back to the east coast with Noah — but there's also a part of Elle that isn't quite sure which choice is best for her. "Maybe your choices have more to do with what other people want," notes Elle's mom (played by Molly Ringwald) astutely in the trailer. "Maybe it's time to think about what you want." While she mulls over the biggest decision she's ever faced, however, Elle's keeping busy with a beach bucket list with Lee that includes competing in a professional sandcastle building competition and jumping off of a cliff. Also keeping her on her toes is the sudden reappearance of Marco thee Snack (Taylor Zakhar Perez), who is still very fine and still very into Elle, resulting yet another major choice for her to make: stay with Noah or make a new future with the equally hot Marco? (There is a right answer, girl.) All in all, the trailer promises fun in the sun, romance, and just the right amount of stress, which is what what The Kissing Booth has always been about. While many may be dreading the end of this teen trilogy, all good things must come to an end — just like you survived the end of To All the Boys, you'll be okay when Elle and Noah's story is over. Plus, if you miss Jacob Elordi too much, season two of Euphoria is just around the corner. The Kissing Booth 3 will be available for streaming starting August 11, 2021, only on Netflix. By Daniel Westlake A movie soundtrack is one of the most important parts of a film, yet few people know how or where to download them. You can buy tracks at iTunes or AmazonMP3. However, there are a number of online sites where you can download that amazing movie soundtrack you heard in that film the other day. All you need to do is identify the movie, the composer and check out one of these sites. An extensive database that goes beyond the opening theme song, the song over the credits or the tune all the characters dance to—it features the less notable numbers from a film that only real fans will recognize. With more than 45,000 titles to choose from, SoundtrackCollector.com is for the serious musician and soundtrack enthusiast who is truly a fan of composers and the often brilliant and underappreciated work they do for every film. With what may be the biggest database of movie soundtracks online, ArtistDirect.com provides most of these downloads for free (with a fee that must be paid for access to others). However, most of the soundtracks that are the easiest to find are mainstream pop songs that have been purchased for the soundtrack, not necessarily from composers who have done movie scores. Keep this in mind if you are looking for something reasonably obscure. Last.fm seems to have most music tracks in its database--the challenge comes with finding those tracks. If you're going to use Last.fm to track down these free soundtracks, have all the keyword information available to locate them. Some of the titles are listed by film, some are listed by composer and others are just listed by title. Don't be discouraged if you can't find it initially--or just use one of the other sites listed above.
